AUTOMATIC EXTERNAL DEFIBRILLATION

350,000 relatives, co-workers, and neighbors will suffer a Sudden Cardiac Arrest this year. Despite immediate CPR efforts and a rapid 911 response, tragically less than 5% will survive. In response to these chilling statistics the Food and Drug Administration, Federal and State Legislatures, as well as OSHA, have approved Automatic External Defibrillators (AEDs) and recommend implementation in the workplace. AEDs are devices designed to administer an electric shock to the heart of a Sudden Cardiac Arrest victim.

This "electric medicine" stops a fatal rhythm called Ventricular Fibrillation and allows the patient's heart to begin beating on its own. The shock can only be delivered after the device has verified the patient is in Cardiac Arrest, delivery of an inappropriate shock is not possible. AEDs are safe, affordable and extremely effective. These life saving devices are easy to use making them well suited for the non-medical rescuers. The American Heart Association as well as Federal guidelines recommend that AED treatment be given within the first 3-5 minutes of a Sudden Cardiac Arrest. To achieve this recommendation, organizations must consider strategically placing AEDs throughout their facilities and training appropriate numbers of employees to use them. Organizations with 3-5 minute response times have achieved survival rates of 70% or more! Every minute that defibrillation is delayed, 7-10% of survivability is lost. After 10 minutes without defibrillation the patient's chances of survival drops to less than 5%.

To effectively treat Sudden Cardiac Arrest, AEDs must be immediately available.

A corporate AED program may prove to be your employee's most valuable benefit.
